

From Washington—Nebraska.
[The following correspondence of the Republican shows how little the administration, or Atchison, care for any principle involved in the Nebraska question—one wishes to regulate a State election—the other to kill off a political opponent. Patriotic men, influenced by patriotic motives. They care but little how the country is excited by agitating dangerous questions, so they succeed.]

"The last night's debate was full of high interest. There were a number of exciting personal scenes, during which the Senate was the scene of wild uproar and confusion in the galleries and on the floor. This was particularly the case at the personal passage of Mr. Douglas's speech, after midnight, on Chase and Sumner and their Free Soil and Abolition allies. The applause was tremendous, and it was very late, and not a few of the Senators were in high animal spirits, from the refreshments of which they had indiscriminately partaken, the Chair did not think it worth while to check the noise and confusion. There were, too, a few incoherent symptoms of a row between Norris, of New Hampshire, and Sumner, on account of some charges of the former upon the latter. The breeze did not, however, proceed further than a gentle gale.

Old Sam Houston had the last say, explaining to Douglas in a set speech of an hour and a half, and being as abusive of the "little giant," as the latter was of the Free Soilers. Douglas made no reply at the time, but will doubtless retaliate upon his Brooding antagonist on some future occasion, as Foote did, who was not bigger than Douglas corporally, and not so big intellectually. Upon the whole, it was a great night, and when at five o'clock a. m. the deed was done the Senate dispersed to meet on Friday the 7th inst.

"It is said the bill will come to the House on to-morrow, and that Richardson will move to refer it to the Committee on Territories for the purpose of amendment, allowing the debate to go on upon the general question in the mean time, if the House choose, in committee of the whole.

"Very important amendments have been made in the bill in its progress through the Senate, which ought to receive very deliberate attention.

"The amendment presented by Mr. Clayton, striking from the bill the clause giving unauthorized settlers in Nebraska, have merely declared their intention of becoming citizens, the privilege of voting for members of the Territorial Legislature, was prepared by Mr. Atchison, and placed in the hands of Mr. Clayton. It was carried by two majority, Mr. Atchison making a warm speech in its favor. Atchison's object was this: Benton will be compelled to vote for the bill as an alternative to political martyrdom. Benton's chief strength is with the German Democrats of Saint Louis and vicinity—Mr. Atchison not only does not like these Red Republicans, but cordially hates them, and the sentiment is on their part heartily reciprocated. He is willing, therefore, to give them a proof of his affection under the fifth rib; but would not go out of his way to do it, but that he thinks he can, through their ribs, reach the vital of Old Bullion. Now by the amendment adopted the newly arrived brethren of these Germans will be kept out of Nebraska, or they will be excluded from interfering with the native citizens on the slavery question. Benton must take or reject the bill with this feature. If he adopt it, the Germans cut him; if he votes against the bill Missouri repudiates him. Upon the whole, it would seem that Atchison has got him. In so serene a lung between the bear and the devil, I really know not which side to take, and for fear of offending one side or the other, shall abstain from further comment.

"It is said to be the intention of Richardson to strike out this amendment in committee, as a very dangerous issue for the Northern Democratic candidates. In the very clear statement prepared by the author of this correspondence for the census of '50, it was shown that the German element in our population were next in proportion to the Irish, and that it was increasing with more rapid strides than any other class of immigration. The German vote of 1850 will be an object of hope and fear to Douglas, Pierce, and indeed every Northern aspirant. This anti German clause in the bill will not be forgotten, and, in fact, it must, if possible, be got rid of, but if got rid of, be it remembered, there is every probability that the unfledged German citizens, will rush into Nebraska and vote slavery out of it. It is a two-edged sword, and will make a notable stir in the House, and afterwards in the Senate.

"The next amendment is of greater practical importance, and like the former, was prepared by other hands than those which presented it. Mr. Badger moved that, by the repeal of the Missouri prohibition, slavery should not be held to be revived under law of Louisiana tolerating it in all the North-west Territory when that prohibition was adopted. I may perhaps, have before explained that it was suggested and demanded by Stuart, of Michigan, who almost came to fistfists with Douglas over it. It was thought likely to receive the assent of the South more generally, if presented through Badger, and was moved by him. The effect of this amendment is not clear. If the constitution carries slavery into Nebraska, as most Southern men assert, but as Chase, and Stuart, and all the Northern Senators deny, then it does not require the French law or any other law. But if the constitution has no such self acting force, then it is plain an act of the Territorial Legislature will be required, under this law, to legalize its admission. Now, Mr. Letcher, of Virginia, says that he will not vote for the bill, unless point that is made clear. The Committee will report in favor of striking out the amendment.

It is said that the Governor's veto power is so circumscribed that a majority of the Legislature can overrule it. And finally it is reported that one of the latest amendments of the Senate waives the right of supervision by Congress over the acts of the Territorial Legislature, so that the Governor and Legislature together are absolute.

Such is the bill as it stands. It will probably be referred to the Committee on Territories without a struggle, and will be retained there until the results of the New Hampshire election are known. If that contest results in favor of the Administration the bill will go through without serious resistance. If the Administration lose the day, then that State the bill will certainly go through without touching bottom.

Before he was elected printer to the House, the other day Nicholson gave a pledge to the self-styled members, that he would not hold out the Nebraska bill as a test of Democracy. Accordingly, on Saturday morning the "Union" comes out with a long article to the effect that all the opponents of the Nebraska bill are not Abolitionists, but that some of them are very excellent, though mistaken Democrats. But by way of balancing the ledger, he yesterday produces a flaming report of the last night's doings in the Senate, exalting Douglas to the seventh heaven of political advancement, and lashing all Free Soilers and Abolitionists without mercy.

The signs of the day clearly indicate that the organ means to trim its rig until after the New Hampshire election, and a more decisive test of the temper of the House, so as to be able finally to adopt or reject the Nebraska bill as an Administration issue.

From the Baltimore Patriot, Feb. 1st.
Passage of the Nebraska Bill.
The United States Senate was in session all last night, and the telegraph brings us the intelligence that this morning, between five and six o'clock, the final vote was taken on the Nebraska bill, and it was passed by a decided majority.

So ends the discussion in the Senate, and now the responsibility of passing the bill, and thus doing justice to all the States, whose citizens may desire to emigrate to Nebraska, devolves upon the House. And how will they meet this responsibility? The accounts from Washington, which the decided vote in the Senate endorses, are that the bill will certainly pass the House, a large majority of the members having already declared their determination to vote for it. The President's approval is not doubtful, and the prospect is that the bill will become a law at this session, and immediate measures be taken to organize a territorial government of Nebraska, free from all restrictions, so far as the action of Congress could control them, as to the law which shall govern the local affairs of the territory.

Now any one could object to a bill like this, we can only understand when we look at the prejudices which prompt the action of many public and private citizens. These prejudices, have been strong enough to influence the vote of one or two Senators against the bill, whose public character and strong devotion to the equal rights of the States, make it a matter of general regret that they could not and did not rise above them. But we may say for them, that their vote against the bill is not to be taken as an inference that they will be found hereafter with the factions of the North or South, to disturb the harmony of the Union.

The passage of the Nebraska bill by Congress, will be nothing more and nothing less than an emphatic declaration on their part, that the question of domestic slavery is a matter to be determined by the people of the several States for themselves; and to this end Congress will include in no law for organizing territorial governments, any provision to allow or prohibit it in them.

That this is the true constitutional ground, the debate in the Senate has clearly demonstrated, and the final vote on the passage of the bill, we trust will be regarded as settling. Nothing now wanted to perpetuate the harmony, which the passage of this bill should reveal between all the States, North and South, and East and West, but the cordial support by the press of the Union the principle it establishes; and that is, that the people shall determine for themselves what shall be the laws of the country, where they have made their homes, subject only to the provisions and limitations of the Constitution of the United States. Standing by this principle, slavery agitation will be expelled from the halls of Congress, and the general government be free, in all its departments from the evil influences, which Abolitionists and free-soilers have brought heretofore to bear upon it—and so the harmony of the States preserved, the perpetuation of the Union secure, and the people left free to establish their own State laws for their own government.

"Many a true heart, that would have come back like a dove to the Ark, after its first transgression, has been frightened beyond recall by the angry look and menace, the taunt, the savage charity of an unforgiving soul.

"Philadelphia is not without its curiosities. The Sun copies two signs it has discovered there. One sign is painted in Italian, and reads thus: "Shirts Retained Here." This we take for the Dachevors. The other reads: "Hands Wanted to Work on Bonsons." For whose benefit is that?

"To forget and forgive is the good man's revenge.
